Kazalinsk uyezd the boys marry from 9 to 12 years of age. The early 582 marriage of the daughters is dependent on the poverty of the parents, for whom it is difficult to support them. In the Chimkent uyezd the bride is usually sent away at the age of 20 to 25.

After the full payment of the kalym the marriage cannot fail 586 to be consummated. But unchastity or other faults (aib) of the bride 836 which have taken place without it being the fault of the groom, and also the incapacity of the groom for marital cohabitation can be reasons for not consummating the marriage even after the payment of the bride price.

A good groom keeps silent about the shortcoming of his bride which he knows about, especially since now a bride who is faultless is rarely found (Perovsk uyezd). If he makes a complaint but does not renounce the marriage he can be returned half the kalym. If he completely renounces the bride, they offer him the choice of another daughter or the whole (tegiz) kalym which has been paid. If the groom refuses the marriage without guilt on the part of the bride, he cannot demand the return of the paid kalym. Sometimes it happens that they do return part of the kalym to him. (2) From the Chimkent uyezd it is reported that in /56/ the case of such a refusal, if the groom had been living with his bride, he pays a fine of eight horses and one camel.

2. If the bride declares her unwillingness before the Russian authorities, to marry the groom chosen by her father, then if she is still in her father's house, this is equivalent to the annulment of the ritual of marriage, and she is permitted to marry according to her own choice, with the return of the part of the kalym received from the former groom.

If the bride complains to her mother of the groom's having relations with her before the wedding, then his clothes are torn and the belly of his horse is ripped open.

If a girl who is not betroth[illegible] has a child, she is considered the 588 wife of the child's father, without having received a kalym. Her father or kinsman may sometimes demand a full kalym for her, depending on the beauty and youth of the bride and the wealth of her parents.

After the death of the groom, the bride is counted on for his 587 brother and /schitaetsia za ego bratom/ in general for his nearest kinsman, which proves that the bride was and is now considered the property of the clan often more. For the mutilation of a woman, half as much wergeld is paid as for the same mutilation suffered by a man. 562 [681]

In contradiction to the report of I. I. Ibragimov in "Zamtki o Kirgizskom Sude" /Notes on Kazakh Justice/, St. Petersburg, 1878), concerning the judgment of affairs of widows of prominent Kazakhs, Torgai holds that the widows of such persons are not turned to for judgment, and that even if they asked the woman, she could not decide the affair. She can only assist in the pacification between husband and wife, saying to each: Stop, do not scold, this is shameful (koy, yaman syuileme, aib bulady). (2) According to the report of bii Sultan Kanaev, although a woman cannot be a bii, in some villages one can find women who do judge the affairs of women (khatyndy biyley tugun).

2. According to Makovetskii, I, p. 31, a village is sometimes ruled by a widow temporarily, until her sons reach majority. On the matriarchy as the oldest structure preceding the patriarchy, cf. Pervobytnoe Pravo /Primitive Law/ by Maksim Kovalevskii, Pt. I, Chapter III: The maternal clan.

/96/ Women do not take an active part in war. If they have enough spirit (gayrati kelse), they defend their village against attacks (Abdrakhman). In one folk epic the wife, named Khanekey, accompanies her husband Zarlyk on an expedition to free the husband's sister.

The woman nurses the wounded relatives. The care of those who are not relatives is left to her good nature. [612]

E. A. Aleksandrov reports that custom in general forbids women to slaughter animals, but in extremity when the men and grown boys are absent from the village a woman can slaughter a sheep for food, carrying out all the necessary religious ceremonials. [231]

Children out of wedlock can fail to be adopted. Then they go to to seek their father. 848

The children of a girl who is not betrothed to their father also go to seek their father. A bridegroom does not consent to take a bride with strange children. He is more apt to make a raid (barymta) to kill the father of these children (Perovsk uyezd). [628]

The people do not permit unlawful cohabitation, but it does exist, and in such cases the men call the women living with them servants, as though they were working for wages. The women in 588

588 question, if they do not come to terms with their lovers, demand payment in court for their service. Such a complaint took place in the Kazalinsk uyezd in 1887, by a woman who had lived with a man more than 10 years. The bii rejected her suit against the man.

586 If after the departure of the husband a child is born after 9
837 months and 10 days or more, the husband divorces the wife, and she 848 marries her lover, who pays the former husband a kalym, either his daughter or a kinswoman. If the husband does not wish a divorce, he receives the wife with the strange child and a fine from the lover of 2-3 camels (in former times he received a full kalym). If the child was conceived by the lover, but not during the absence of the father, it is considered the lawful child of the husband. According to Torgai, children of widows, born out of wedlock, remain /97/ with her until her death. Before she dies they ask about their father and look for him.

848 It is impossible to speak of illegitimate children of unmarried girls, according to Torgai, for on the steppe all the girls marry (kyz dalada kalmaydy). In the Kazalinsk uyezd such children are buried in the ground. According to Aleksandrov and Makovetskii, a child born of a widow and the brother of her deceased husband is considered a legitimately born member of the family. (1)

1. Staff Captain Grombchevskii reports the following concerning the attitude of the Kirgiz of the Fergana region to illegitimate children. Bringing a child into the world from fornication not only covers the family of the girl with shame, but also her entire clan. In order to avoid the scandal they try to marry the girl upon the first signs of pregnancy. When this is not successful, they have recourse to stopping the prenancy. This is either done mechanically, or by giving the patient an infusion of the "usma" plant, or finally they put the child to death immediately after birth. Illegitimate children do not succeed the father, and are usually banished from the village as soon as they are big enough to herd livestock or to support themselves by other means. They are called kharam, kharmzade, valadizina, and in the Ketmen-Tiube volost also gartakum (born of a libertine). There are cases, however, when the birth of a child out of wedlock is not considered a scandal, namely, 1) from a groom and bride, if they later marry, 2) from a widow and

[847]